

Open Call for Volunteers to Express an Interest in:

Scouting Irelands National First Aid Team

March 2026

Do you have expertise in First Aid skills? Do you have experience in the medical field or have an interest in a career in medicine?

Scouting Ireland is excited to announce the formation of a new National First Aid Team — and we need YOU to help shape this vital initiative.

This team will work to create a dedicated, well-trained, and strategically integrated National First Aid Team that supports Scouting Ireland's events, training, and welfare initiatives. This team will aim to enhance safety, promote health awareness, and ensure robust emergency preparedness across all scouting activities.

Members of this team may have a First Aid Certification or may be looking to develop these skills. They will play a key role in supporting operations and safeguarding at national events and other scouting activities. Members will collaborate with the Listening Ear and Welfare Teams to ensure not only the physical but also emotional and mental health needs of all scouts are supported.

If you are someone who has experience with supporting medical operations, have an interest in the medical field or have experience in emergency medicine we would love to hear from you. Complete the form on the next page to apply:
